July 26.
Westminster.

Whereas John de Gascrik, Thomas de Turneflet, John de Raskelf of Feriby, Thomas de Bramwythe, Bernard de Hulle, and other good men of the town of Barton-upon-Humber, by reason of a depredation committed upon the sea by the king's Scotch enemies and rebels and the adherents of those enemies, upon their goods and chattels to the value of a thousand pounds sterling, have made their supplication to the king that he will grant to them a licence that they may equip, at their own expense, two ships with men capable of bearing arms and with all necessary provisions, and with those ships so armed set out, as often as they shall see fit, against his enemies and rebels and their adherents, to repress their malice and frowardness and repel their hostile incursions. The king having accepted security from each man who is about to set out in the said ships against his enemies that he will not inflict any loss, injury, annoyance, or grievance upon any person being in the king's peace and allegiance, and that they all will set out against his enemies and rebels and their adherents, as quickly as they can, to repress, with the help of God, their hostile incursions, has thought fit to grant his assent to their prayer according to the form of the security aforesaid. And therefore he commands all bailiffs and others not to commit nor suffer others to commit, any injury, annoyance, loss, impediment, or grievance against the said John son of John de Gascryk of Barton, Thomas de Turneflet, Thomas de Bramwythe of Barton, or any of the other persons who are about to set out in the said ships, as is promised, whilst going by land or water against his enemies and adherents, staying and returning, but rather to assist them with counsel and to help them to repress such incursions as often as such bailiffs or ministers shall be requisitioned by them or any of them on that behalf.

The king to John de Gascrik, Thomas de Turneflet, John de Raskelf of Feriby, Thomas de Bramwythe, Bernard de Hulle and other good men of the town of Barton-upon-Humber. Whereas they have made known to the king in their grievous complaint, that certain of his enemies and rebels from the parts of Scotland, together with other malefactors, their adherents, have after the manner of thieves and pirates, violently taken and carried away goods and chattels of the complainants, to the value of a thousand pounds sterling, out of five ships of theirs found upon the sea near Whitekirk and Sitternest, and have wickedly killed certain men of theirs in those ships, and have inflicted many other injuries upon them to their great loss and manifest impoverishment, and whereas they have petitioned the king to grant them that they may equip at their own expense two ships, with men capable of bearing arms, and necessary provisions, and with those ships so armed, may set out against his enemies and rebels to repress their malice and frowardness, and to repel their hostile incursions, as often as it shall seem fitting. The king wishing to take precautions against the dangers which can easily happen, by his writ commands the sheriff of the county of Lincoln that, having accepted sufficient security from each man who is about to set out in those ships as aforesaid, not to inflict any loss, injury, annoyance, or grievance upon any person being in the king's peace and allegiance, and that they all will set out as quickly as they can against his said enemies and their adherents to repress their incursions, he shall under his seal certify to the king the names of those persons who shall become mainperners for those setting out in the ships. And because the sheriff has returned to the king into the Chancery that John son of John de Gaseryk of Barton, Thomas de Turneflete, Thomas de Bramwythe of Barton, and others who are about to set out in the ships, as is premised, have found before him a guarantee or security according to the tenor of the writ, as is more fully contained in the return, the king accepting such guarantee or security has thought fit to assent to their petition, provided that nothing shall be attempted or presumed to be attempted against the form of the said security by them or the others who will set out in their ships.

July 26.
Westminster.

Philip de Kyme, Edmund Deyncourt, John Gubaud, and the sheriff of the county of Lincoln had been appointed, 17 March, 1 Edward II., to enforce the statute of Winchester, and to hold an enquiry touching forestalling and other offences, with power to imprison, until the receipt of further instructions, all persons found guilty, and as many such offenders had been detained in prison, from which they could not be liberated without special order, from whom sheriffs and other ministers and bailiffs of the king replevied divers sums of money, and misappropriated the same to their own uses, the king had appointed the said Philip de Kyme, with Roger de Scotre and Nicholas de Bolyngbroke, or two of them, to hear and determine all such trespasses, as more fully is contained in the letters patent made on that behalf. The king, because these matters still remain unfinished, by reason of the death of Roger de Scotre, and the frequent absences of Nicholas de Bolyngbroke, commissions the said Philip de Kyme and Edmund de Eyncourt, with Roger de Cubbeldyk, or two of them, to hear and determine all trespasses for which the prisoners were convicted, and of which they wish to stand to right in court before them according to the right and custom of the realm, and to take reasonable fines for the king's use, according to the gravity of the offence, from those so convicted, who for the trespasses imposed on them wish to make fines, and also from those who shall happen to be judged or convicted before them of such trespasses, and also to enquire by oath of good men of the said county what sheriff and other ministers in the same county have of their own authority replevied the convicted persons, and what sums of money they have received from them to their own use, and to inflict due punishment on any sheriff or ministers whom they shall find guilty. They are to remit all fines which they shall receive on this account to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer.

When returning from Flanders, where they had been on business, to their own country, their ship having grounded on a sandbank by the port of Romeneye, they, seeing the danger to themselves and to the others in the ship, and to the ship itself of being submerged, took to their boats and landed at the town of Romeneye, where they made an agreement, as they assert, with the men of that town, and with others of the towns of Lede and Wynchelse, to deliver their ship and goods from danger, for which the men were to receive the value of a fourth part of the goods as soon as they should come ashore with the ship and cargo. Subsequently the salvors, not being content with a fourth part according to their agreement, sought to obtain a third part of the goods, and afterwards, because the merchants would by no means agree to their demand, forcibly, against the will of the merchants, took out of the ship one half of all the goods and carried them away, and of the residue of the goods which remained in the ship they took a third part for their own use against the will of the complainants, and to their loss to the sum of 1,000*l.* and upwards, and whereupon the merchants petitioned the king for redress. [Parl. Writs.] By the Chancellor.

Nov. 10. The like to William Inge, Henry Spigurnel, Robert son of Payn, Westminster. Edmund de Malo Lacu, John de Foxle and John de Button. Although the king had lately committed to Bartholomew de Badelesmere the custody of his castle of Bristol and of the town and barton of Bristol, to hold during pleasure, for a certain farm to be rendered yearly at the Exchequer, and frequently enjoined on the men of the town to answer to him as constable of the castle and keeper of the town and barton, or to his attorney in that behalf, in all matters which appertain to the custody of the castle, town, and barton, William de Axe, then mayor of the town, and John le Taverner, Thomas de la Grave, John de Kerdyf, John Hasard, Richard Colpek, Robert de Holhurst, Robert Martin, William de Clyf, Richard de Wodehulle, Thomas Uppediche, Walter Fraunceys, clerk, Richard le White, 'pesshoner,' Thomas de Salop, Adam Wysman, John Fraunceys, the elder, Richard de Cheddre, John de Keynesham, Philip de Sweyneseye, John le Lang, 'maryner,' Roger Blanket, John Legat, Nicholas le Taillur, Philip le Spicer, Nicholas de Farleye, Gilbert de Derby, William Flemmynge, William Burgeys, Thomas Butiller and Richard Legat, with others of the town, ignoring the king's commands, refused to obey him or his attorney. Subsequently the king, having for divers causes taken the liberty of the town into his hands, and having committed it during his pleasure to the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere, who was to answer at the Exchequer for the issues thereof, the same John le Taverner, William de Clyf, and Gilbert Pokerel, exercised the offices of mayor and bailiffs in the town, as if the liberty of the town had not been taken into the king's hands, and they with the other persons above named, by their own authority, usurped and converted to their own uses the profits accruing in the town, which Bartholomew de Badelesmere, as constable of the castle and keeper of the town and barton and of the liberty thereof by virtue of the king's commissions to him and to his attorney, ought to have received. They also forcibly impeded him and his attorney and the other ministers appointed by him for collecting, exercising, and doing those things which appertain to such custody, in the collection and execution of the same, and beat, wounded, and imprisoned his deputies; and also in divers places in the town they made barricades and other impediments, not permitting victuals or other things to be borne or even carried from the town, or through it, to the castle for the strengthening and custody thereof. Furthermore they forcibly broke the king's mills by the castle and made frequent attacks, as against enemies, on the men who were in the castle for its custody, by shooting arrows and quarrels into the castle, and finally they erected and crenellated a wall of stone and lime in the street called 'Wynchestrete' and made barricades in divers places opposite the castle, discharging arrows and quarrels through the battlements (per kernella muri) against the castle. They also with armed force hindered Thomas de Berkele, John de Welyngton, Master Richard de Abyndon, and the same John de Button, sent by the king to Bristol to assess a tallage in that town for his use and to make divers inquisitions there, from doing these things which appertained to their office, and imprisoned them. Further they conspired together and entered into a confederacy among themselves to commit trespasses against the king, his constable and keeper, and the attorney of the latter. They assessed many tallages on the commonality of the town, by reason whereof they oppressed the people there, converted the greater part of the money accruing from such tallages to their own uses, and having no consideration to the caption of the liberty of the town into the king's hands, but rather treating with contempt his action in that matter, held an election among themselves of a mayor and bailiffs for the town, who cease not to execute such offices there in contempt of the king's mandates, to the manifest derogation of the king's right and to the impoverishment of the town and against the peace. The justices, of whom William Inge is to be one, are to enquire into these matters by oath of good men of the county of Gloucester.

The justices are to enquire into whose hands such chattels have fallen, and in whose hands they are, and how the chattels or their value are to be levied and delivered to the men of the town, so that they can answer for the same, as at other times, before the justices of the next eyre in the county.

MEMBRANE 26.

Nov. 28.

Westminster.

Inspeximus and confirmation of the under-mentioned charter, dated 2 September, 36 Henry III., and ordinance of the same king making provision for the security of the men of the marsh of Romenhale, co. Kent. As, from a time whereof memory does not exist, all distrainments should be made by twenty-four lawful men of the marsh of Romenhale, elected and sworn for the purpose, upon all those who held lands and tenements in the marsh to repair its walls and watergangs against the inroad of the sea and the danger arising therefrom, and also upon all those who were bound and held to the repairing of the said walls and watergangs, king Henry III. granted to the same twenty-four jurats that for the security of the marsh they might make such distrainments, provided that the distrainments were made equally according to the parts, greater or lesser, which the men held in the marsh and according to which they were bound in that behalf. He further granted that no sheriff of the county of Kent, nor any other of his bailiffs, should in any manner meddle with the distrainments made by award of the jurats, for should any one bring to the king a complaint against the awards, he would cause justice to be done to the complainant in his court, and he reserved justice therein to himself, or his especial mandate. Afterwards, upon information that the jurats were unable, by reason of the resistance of some the men of the marsh, who were bound to carry out repairs of the walls and watergangs according to the extent of the lands and tenements which they held, to make the said distrainments, whereby the walls and watergangs remained unrepaired, to his great loss and that of the men of the marsh, king Henry III. appointed Henry de Bathon, 42 Henry III., his justice to hear and determine the contentions which had arisen between the twenty-four jurats and the said men touching such repairs, and also to provide for the security and defence of the marsh against the inundation of the sea and fresh waters, by making the repairs of the walls and watergangs. Henry de Bathon was to certify king Henry III. of what he did therein, so that the king might order the same to be enrolled. By authority of this commission, Henry de Bathon, on Saturday next after the feast of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, 42 Henry III., being then at Romenhale, there being associated with him Nicholas de Haudlo and Alvred de Dene, and the sheriff of the county of Kent also assisting him, the council of the commonalty of the men of the marsh also intervening, and no one opposing, ordered as follows, viz., that twelve lawful men should be chosen by the entire commonalty of the marsh, viz., six of the fee of the archbishop of Canterbury and six of the barony, who, being sworn, should measure the walls, both new and old, and those which ought to be constructed; that the measurements should be made by one and the same perch, viz. by the perch of twenty feet; and that afterwards the same jurats in like manner should measure by the same perch all the lands and tenements which being within the marsh were subject to danger, which measurements having been made, the twenty-four jurats previously elected by the commonalty should order, regard being had to the extent of the walls, lands, and tenements which were in danger, how much should pertain to each person for the maintenance and repairs of the walls, so that in proportion to the number of acres in danger, a proportionate part of the works should be assigned to each person; further, that the assignment should be made of certain places so that it might be known where, and what places, and how much each person was bound to defend; and that whenever the necessity might arise of preventing and resisting the danger by the repair of the said walls, the twenty-four jurats should assemble to view the places that might be in danger, to whom the defence of such places should be assigned, and within what time the repairs should be done; that the common bailiff of the marsh should inform the persons to whom those places were assigned that they were to execute the repairs within the appointed term, and if within such time they should neglect to do so, the said bailiff should cause such repairs to be made by the view of twenty-four jurats; that the person so making default should be bound to render the bailiff double the cost of the repairs, which amount should be reserved for the maintenance of the walls and for the execution of repairs, and the amount should be levied by distraint upon the lands of the defaulter within the marsh; that if any plots of land were held in common by co-parceners so that to each co-parcener, for the portion of his part, a certain place, to wit, a whole or half perch, could not be assigned, by reason of the smallness of the plot, then the plot should be viewed by twenty-four jurats to see how much the said land, which was so bound in common, would suffice to defend, and a certain portion of the defence should be assigned in common to the co-parceners for the proportion of their common land, and if any one of the co-parceners should make default after warning by the said bailiff, his part should be assigned to the others, who should hold his share of the land until the defaulter should pay the costs laid out by view of twenty-four jurats for the defence of his part, and also the double sum for the maintenance of the walls and the execution of repairs, as above; if, however, all the co-parceners made default, then the common bailiff should execute the entire work and should make distraint upon the co-parceners afterwards for double the cost laid out by him, and by view of twenty-four jurats, saving to the chief lords in the marsh their right, which they have against their tenants, of such defence according to their feoffments; and lastly, that all the lands in the marsh should be kept and preserved against the inroads of the sea and inundations of sweet waters by walls and sewers, by oath and award of twenty-four jurats as in times past, as by an inspection of the Rolls of the Chancery of king Henry III., for the forty-second year of his reign, appears to king Edward II. Further, king Edward II., noting that the inroad of the sea in those places has now increased more than usual, by which it is the more necessary to keep watch about the repair of the walls there, and that by a breakage of those walls, however small, great expense may happen to him and the men of the marsh, and wishing also to prevent such losses and dangers, and to provide for the safety of those parts as well for himself as for the men of the marsh, ratifies all things contained in the above letters patent of Henry III., and in the ordinance, and further grants that no sheriff of the county of Kent, nor any other of his bailiffs for the time being, shall in any way meddle with distrains made, or to be made, by award of the said twenty jurats, but that justice to be done therein shall be reserved to himself, and his heirs, or to his especial mandate as is above expressed in the letters of king Henry III. By C.

Nicholas de Vual, and that his servant when on his way to Caen, having been by mischance drowned at night in the river Littel at the town of Litteleport, which is within the liberty of the bishop of Ely, the bailiffs of the liberty asserting that the money sewn in the corset and found with the body was a deodand, placed that money under the seal of the complainant, as he claimed it to be his property, and under the seals of good men of those parts, in the hands of the bishop and of men of those towns to be kept safe until right should be done therein, by reason of which act the money was detained from him to his great loss. And as by twelve lawful men of the city of London and elsewhere, specially summoned on the matter and sworn, the complainant proved that the money was his and that he had delivered it to his servant, it appeared to the king and the council that the money ought not to be adjudged to be a deodand, for which reason the king has caused the money to be delivered to him as abovesaid.

The late king Edward I. by his letters patent assigned to queen Margaret, his consort, for her life, in recompence for the manor of Stepclaneford, which he had assigned to her in dower, but which he subsequently by judgment of his court surrendered to John son of Oliver de Ingham and Reginald de Sancto Martino, 50*l.* a year to be received by her from the abbot of Hayles, for the time being, out of the farm of 100*l.* which the abbot was bound to render every year to the king for the manor of Lechelade. Edward II. afterwards, amongst other lands and tenements, granted to Peter de Gavaston, earl of Cornwall, deceased, the said rent of 100*l.*, to be received by him from the abbot of Hayles out of the said manor, as is more fully contained in the charter, and on the fifth day of August in the third year of his reign issued his mandate to the abbot to answer for this rent to the earl of Cornwall. On 3 April 1314, that rent having, with the other lands and tenements late of Peter de Gavaston, fallen into the king's hands, he, wishing that queen Margaret should receive the said rent of 50*l.* according to the assignment made to her, commanded the abbot to pay her that sum out of the farm of the manor at the usual terms, as is more fully contained in the letters patent. June 5. Appointment of Henry de Cobeham, the younger, Roger le Sauvage Newminster. and Richard de Rokesleye to be conservators of the peace and of the statute of Winchester in the county of Kent, as the king understands, from the loud complaint of his people, that after he set out upon his march to Scotland, great outrages had been committed as well by knights as others, who confederated together, held conventicles and other unlawful assemblies, as well by day as night, committed assaults and murders, broke the parks both of the king and his subjects, and hunted the deer, which outrages have not been duly repressed by the sheriffs and other officers and ministers of the king. The conservators are to enquire by the oath of good and lawful men concerning such disturbances and transgressions, and also all other offences against the peace. All persons against whom indictments shall be found, or who shall be notoriously suspected, are to be pursued, taken, and kept in custody by the sheriff so that they be not enlarged without the special command of the king. The posse comitatus is to be raised whenever necessary. The conservators are to make returns from month to month to the Council at Westminster of their proceedings, and of the names of the malefactors. The king will shortly send certain of his lieges into their county to do justice upon the offenders, and also to ascertain whether the conservators have been sufficiently diligent, and how the sheriff has conducted himself therein. The like to John de Foxle and John Abel. Whereas by an inquisition lately made by the king's command, and returned into the Chancery, the king understood that Henry III., his grandfather, had granted to a certain William Aguillon a rent seek of the value of 100s. a year, to be received by him by the hands of the reeve of the manor of Warblyngton, co. Southampton, to hold to him and his heirs, and subsequently the same king Henry III. granted in fee to one Matthew son of Herbert, and his heirs, that manor, with the hamlets of Empnesworthe, Esteneye and Middelton; that afterwards Peter, son and heir of the said Matthew, in the time of king Edward I., appointed Robert Aguillon, son and heir of the said William Aguillon, to receive the said 100s. a year by the hands of certain villeins in Empnesworthe, reserving to the said Peter, and his heirs, for ever, certain services and customs of those villeins; and that the said Robert Aguillon, after Matthew son of John, kinsman and heir of the said Peter, enfeoffed the late king, Edward I., of the said manor and hamlets, and after Edward I. had thereupon regranted them to the said Matthew, for his life, by the negligence and permission of the said Matthew, usurped to himself dominion over those villeins in Empnesworthe, videlicet, ransom of blood, view of frank-pledge, emends of the breach of the assise of bread and ale, and fines for the lands of the same villeins, and in like manner a fishery in the water there, which Isabella Bardolf now holds, by reason whereof the king has caused the said dominion, liberties, and fishery so usurped and detained to be taken into his hands; and the said Isabella, daughter and heir of the said Robert, afterwards in the king's court asserted in the presence of Robert le Ewer, who followed on behalf of the king, that king Henry III. by his charter had granted to the said William Aguillon the land, late of Robert de Curcy, in Empnesworthe and Warblyngton, together with the rents and homages of the same, to hold to him and his heirs from that king, until the king should surrender that land to the right heirs thereof, by rendering to Henry III. and his heirs at Easter a pair of gilt spurs, so that if that king should have surrendered that land to the right heirs, then he or his heirs should make to the same William and his heirs a reasonable exchange in wards or escheats to the value of the same land, as more fully is contained in a charter of king Henry III., which the said Isabella Bardolf has exhibited in the king's court, and that as well the said William her grandfather as the said Robert her father and herself had been seised of the dominion of the said villeins, videlicet, of the ransom of blood, view of frank-pledge, emends of the breach of the assise of bread and ale, and of fines for the lands of those villeins and of the said fishery by virtue of that charter, and she has petitioned the king that he will cause those things to be restored to her which in her absence by pretext of the said inquisition were taken into his hands; the said Robert le Ewer asserting on the contrary that the said William had not been seised of the dominion of those villeins, but that the said Robert son of William had usurped it. The king wishing to be further informed in the premises, and to have justice done therein to the said Isabella Bardolf, assigns the above-named justices to enquire by the oath of good men of the county of Southampton, in her presence and that of the said Robert le Ewer, both of whom are to be forewarned, whether the said William was so seised by virtue of a charter of king Henry III. of the said dominion over the villeins and fishery, as the said Isabella Bardolf asserts, or whether the said Robert son of William usurped them, as is asserted by Robert le Ewer.

Thursday next before Mid Lent, the same persons and many others, their accomplices, propose with an armed force to hinder the taking of the assise, whereby the people of those parts will be terrified, the peace broken, justice deferred and other losses and dangers easily happen, the king commands the said John de Hastings, Nicholas de Segrave and John de Crumbwelle to assist the justices when taking the assise, and publicly to inhibit under pain of forfeiture all persons from hindering the caption of the assise; the commissioners are to attach all persons whom they shall find doing so contrary to the king's inhibition and to have them before the king, wherever he may be in England, in fifteen days of Easter to answer for such contempt. Commission of oyer and terminer to John de Insula and Henry le Scrope, on complaint by Bartholomew de Welle, mariner and merchant of Lenne. John le Clerk, master of a ship called la Gerlaund of Goseford, had been attached at his suit by Richard de Welleford and Simon de Merworthe, late sheriffs of the city of London, to answer to him in the court of that city for that he, the said John le Clerk, together with others, forcibly boarded a ship of the complainant freighted with wines and other goods and wares of his, on Thursday next before St. Thomas the Apostle in the fifth year of the king's reign, on the sea near Rochelle, where the ship was then anchored on account of tempestuous weather, and carried away the cables and other goods found in the ship, together with three anchors, and afterwards with their ship broke and wrecked his vessel and subsequently cut away from his ship two great cables, by which it was held, whereby the ship, wines and other goods on board of her were totally lost, to the value of 600*l*. For a long time the said Bartholomew de Welle prosecuted his suit before the sheriffs to compel the said John le Clerk to make him adequate compensation for the losses which he had sustained. The sheriffs, although neither satisfaction nor amends had been made to him, and while the plea pending between the parties was before them, fraudulently suffered the said John le Clerk, convicted of the trespass in the court, freely to depart from the attachment, together with his ship and goods, to the retarding of the complainant's suit and his impoverishment, although they had caused the said Bartholomew, to wait from the commencement of proceedings until the said John le Clerk had departed for twenty weeks until the Saturday before St. Margaret the Virgin. On that day the said Bartholomew de Welle was told by Richard de Welleford, then one of the sheriffs, and by William de Wengrave, William de Lamhithe and Roger de Depham, clerks of the said sheriffs, that nothing would be done in his business and that no court would be held on that day, because they would be engaged on other business, nevertheless the said clerks in his absence, as he believing the words of the sheriffs and their clerks that no court would be held was not present, fraudulently held a court, when they caused him to be called and because he was not present to prosecute his suit, although neither of the sheriffs was present, gave judgment in that same court, that the said John le Clerk should depart quit of the said complainant, although he too was not present either by himself or his attorney. Thereupon the said Bartholomew de Welle having made a complaint in this matter, the king directed his mandate to John de Gisorciis, then mayor of the city, to have the record and process of the suit before him, and in the presence of the sheriffs, if they wish to be present, to examine and correct any error that might be found in the same, and to do the complainant speedy justice therein according to law merchant and maritime law. Upon further complaint by the said Bartholomew de Welle that the mayor, although he had caused the record and process of the suit to come before him, had not cared to do him further justice therein, the king assigned the above-named justices to examine the record and process at St. Martins le Grand, London, to enquire into the matter by the oath as well of merchants and mariners as of other good and lawful men of the said city, to correct the error and default, if any shall be found in such record and process, and to do justice therein according to the law and custom of the realm, law merchant and maritime law, as far as they shall be necessary or useful, being observed in this business.

Power, at the request of Gilbert, bishop of Enachdune, to the justiciary of Ireland to receive, in the king's name, fealty from Laurence, bishop elect of Elphin, late a canon thereof, whom Pope Clement V. has preferred to be bishop of that place, as appears by the papal bulls directed to the king, and who is, as the bishop of Enachdune has given the king to understand, so prostrated by weakness of body that he is unable personally on this occasion to approach the king to do fealty, although the temporalities of the bishopric could be reasonably retained in the king's hands because a licence to elect had not been sought from him, nor had he given his assent to the election, and also because some words prejudicial to the king and his crown are contained in the apostolic letters. The dean and chapter of the church are to find sufficient security that in future, whenever their church shall be void, they shall not proceed to an election without a licence to elect from the king or his heirs, and that after election they will present the elect to the king, as is the custom, and also the said Laurence is in fitting form to renounce before the justiciary and others of the council convoked by him for this purpose all words prejudicial to the king and to his royal right contained in the said letters by a public instrument, and he is to acknowledge that he receives the temporalities of the bishopric, not by virtue of the said letters, but of the king's special grace. The instrument is to remain in the king's treasury. Having taken fealty and received the security and renunciation, the justiciary is to cause the temporalities to be delivered to the elect.

Afterwards, at the request of Bartholomew de Badelesmere, and in exchange for the manors of Heghtredebury, Colerne and Steurte, co. Wilts, together with the hundreds, knights' fees, advowsons of churches, liberties, free customs, and all other things belonging to those manors which John de la Mare, deceased, then held for his life of the inheritance of William de Monte Forti, and which by virtue of a concession made by the latter should upon the death of John de la Mare remain to Bartholomew de Badelesmere and his heirs, and the reversion of which the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere by his writing granted to the king and his heirs upon the death of the said John de la Mare, and of him the said Bartholomew and Margaret his wife, the king granted that the said castle, manors and rents which Alexander de Balliolo then held, and which upon his death by virtue of the above concession by the king should revert to Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret his wife, should upon their death remain over to the heirs of the said Bartholomew, together with the hundreds, knights' fees, advowsons of churches, liberties, free customs and all other things appertaining to the said castle, manors and rents, to hold in as full and ample manner as Alexander de Balliolo had held them of the king and the other lords of the fee by the due and customary services; and the king further granted that the said manors of Heghtredebury, Colerne and Steurte, with the hundreds, knights' fees, advowsons of churches, liberties, free customs and all other things belonging to those manors should upon the decease of the said John de la Mare remain over to the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret if they should survive him, to hold for the life of either of them, with remainder over upon their death to the king, quit of the heirs of the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere, in exchange as above said, as is contained in his letters patent. And if perchance it may happen that the said castle and manor of Chilham and manors of Ridelingwelde, Kingeston, Hatfeld and Whitstaple and the said rent, or any one of them, shall be claimed from the king, or his heirs, or from the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret, or the heirs of the said Bartholomew, the king grants for himself and his heirs that the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret and the heirs of the said Bartholomew shall hold the said castle, manors and rents in peace, and that he and his heirs will answer to the claimants touching their claim, and if it ought to be gratified the king or his heirs will do so in another place. By K.

On account of his good services to king Edward I., the king had made a grant to Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret his wife of the manor of Bourne, co. Sussex, which Matthias de Monte Martini formerly held, together with its woods, parks, mills, escheats, knights' fees, advowsons of churches, view of frank pledge, liberties, free customs and all other things belonging to that manor to the value of 100 marks of land a year for their lives, or until the king should cause the manor of Lesnes, late of John, sometime earl of Asceles, and which by grant of the late king is in the hands of Margaret, queen of England, to be assigned to them or to the survivor of them, to hold as fully and freely as the earl held the same; if however the manor of Bourne should be found by an extent made thereof to exceed the value of 100 marks a year, then the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret, or the survivor of them, should pay to the king at the Exchequer what was in excess of that sum, but should there be any deficiency, the king was either to make it good, or to make further assignment of lands elsewhere in a suitable place; and they, or the survivor of them, were to do to the king the services which Matthias de Monte Martini was accustomed to do whilst he held the manor. Afterwards, on account of good service to himself, the king granted to the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and his heirs the reversion of the manor of Bokynghfold, co. Kent, upon the death of Thomas de Caumville, who then held it for life of the grant of the late king, together with the advowson of the free chapel of the manor and all other things belonging to the manor, subject to rendering every year to the king at the Exchequer 25*l.*, viz.: one moiety at Michaelmas and the other at Easter, for every service appertaining to the king, as is in his letters patent. The manor of Bokynghfold and advowson of the chapel being, by reason of a surrender made by Thomas de Caumville, in the hands of Bartholomew de Badelesmere, and in exchange for the manor of Tunderle, co. Essex, and of the value of the woods of that manor, which the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere granted to the king and his heirs, the king granted to him and Margaret his wife to hold to them and the heirs of the said Bartholomew the manor of Bourne, with the woods, parks, mills, escheats, knights' fees, advowsons of churches, view of frank pledge, liberties, free customs and all other things belonging to the manor, by doing the usual and customary services to the chief lords of the fee. In like manner, in exchange for the manor of Tunderle with its woods, &c. the king grants to Bartholomew de Badelesmere that he may hold to him and his heirs the manor of Bokynghfold by the service of rendering a clove gilliflower to the king by the hands of the sheriff of the county of Kent at Michaelmas, fully discharged from payment of the said 25*l.* a year after the death of the said Thomas de Caumville: and if it may happen that the said manors of Bourne and Bokynghfold, or either of them, shall be claimed from the king, or his heirs, or from the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret his wife, or from the heirs of the said Bartholomew by any persons, the king grants for himself and his heirs that the said Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret his wife, and the heirs of the said Bartholomew shall hold the said manor of Bourne in peace, and that Bartholomew de Badelesmere and his heirs shall also hold in peace the manor of Bokynghfold with the advowson of its chapel, and that he and his heirs will answer to the claimants touching their claim, and if it ought to be gratified the king or his heirs will do so in another place.

On account of the good service of Bartholomew de Badelesmere the king lately granted to him and Margaret his wife the reversion of the manor of Lesnes, co. Kent, upon the death of queen Margaret, who holds it for life, by grant of king Edward I., of the king's inheritance, to hold to them and the heirs of the said Bartholomew, together with the knights' fees, advowsons of churches and all other things belonging to the manor by the service of half a knights' fee, as is contained in the letters patent. The manor now being in their hands, queen Margaret having surrendered it to them, the king for their greater security grants that they may hold it to them and the heirs of the said Bartholomew, together with its knights' fees, advowsons of churches, &c. by the said service; and further that if it may happen that the manor hereafter shall be claimed from the king and his heirs, or from Bartholomew de Badelesmere and Margaret his wife, or the heirs of the said Bartholomew by any persons, the king grants that they and the heirs of the said Bartholomew shall hold the said manor in peace, and that he or his heirs will answer to the claimants touching their claim, and that if it ought to be gratified, that he, or his heirs, will do so in another place.

Payment is to be made as well out of the debts due to the king as out of the other issues of the sheriff's bailiwick. All his expenses will be allowed to the sheriff in his account at the Exchequer. It is well known that such purveyances can be speedily and conveniently made for the king's money if proper diligence be used, and if the sheriff be remiss in the premises, the king will so punish him as to afford an example to other delinquents. ## MEMBRANE 25d.

Commission of oyer and terminer to John de Foxle and John de Fressingfeld, on complaint by Bartholomew de Welle, mariner and merchant of Lenne. John le Clerk, master of a ship called la Gerlaunde of Goseford, had been attached at his suit by Richard de Welleford and Simon de Mereworthe, late sheriffs of the city of London, to answer to him in the court of the said city of this matter, viz. that the said John le Clerk, together with others, forcibly boarded a certain ship of the complainant, freighted with wines and other wares of his, on Thursday next before the feast of St. Thomas the Apostle in the fifth year of the king's reign, on the coast of the sea near Rochelle, where the ship was then anchored on account of tempestuous weather, and carried away the cables and other goods found in the ship together with three anchors, and afterwards with their ship they broke and wrecked his vessel and subsequently cut away from his ship two great cables, by which it was held, whereby the ship and goods in her were cast away upon the rocks on the coast and sunk. For a long time the complainant prosecuted his suit before the sheriffs to compel the said John le Clerk to make him adequate compensation for that trespass and the loss which he had sustained. The sheriffs, although neither satisfaction nor amends had been made to him, and while the plea pending between the parties was before them, fraudulently permitted the said John le Clerk, convicted of the trespass in court, to depart freely together with his ship and goods from the attachment, to the retarding of the complainant's suit and his impoverishment and loss, although the sheriffs had caused him to wait for judgment in the said suit, in which before the departure of the said John le Clerk process had gone as far as the judgment, from Thursday next after the feast of St. Gregory in the said year of the king's reign until Saturday next before the day of St. Margaret the Virgin then next ensuing throughout twenty weeks. On the last-named day the complainant was told by the said Richard de Welleford, then one of the said sheriffs, and by William de Wengrave, William de Lamhithe and Roger de Depham, clerks of the said sheriffs, that nothing would be done in his business, and that a court would not be held on that day, but that they would be engaged on other business, nevertheless the said clerks in his absence, as he, believing the words of the sheriffs and their clerks that no court would be held, was not present, fraudulently held a court, when they caused him to be called, and because he was not present before them to prosecute his suit, although neither of the sheriffs was present, gave judgment in that same court that the said John le Clerk should depart quit of the suit of the said complainant, although the said John le Clerk was not then there, either by himself or even by his attorney, to the manifest defrauding and deception of the complainant. Thereupon the said Bartholomew de Welle having made a complaint in the matter, the king commanded John de Gisorciis, then mayor of the city, to have the record and process of the suit with all matters touching it brought before him and in the presence of the said sheriffs, forewarned by him to be present if they wished, to examine and correct any error that might be found in the said record and process, and to cause full and speedy justice to be done to the complainant as ought to be done of right, and according to law merchant and maritime law. Upon further complaint by the said Bartholomew de Welle that the mayor, although he had caused the record and process of the suit to come before him, according to the tenor of the king's mandate to that effect directed to him, had not cared to do him further right therein, the king, being unwilling to leave the fraud, if any such has been committed, unpunished, assigned the above-named justices to more fully examine the said record and process to be brought before them at St. Martin's le Grand, London, and, if any fraud was committed as is alleged, to enquire by oath as well

York, Robert de Lacy, together with others, secretly seized the said silver, gold, jewels and wares, and applied them to their own uses. The commissioners are to enquire by oath of good and lawful men of those parts what goods were cast ashore at the said town and in the neighbouring places, what they are worth, into whose hands they have come, and whether they ought to belong to the king as wreck of sea because no beast escaped alive to land, and to arrest all persons whom they shall find guilty, and to do speedy justice therein.

Mandate directed to sheriffs and all other the king's bailiffs and lieges. At the request of the barons and good men of Wynchelse, the king had lately granted them licence to fit out at their own expense two ships to proceed to sea and to pass along the coast of England to protect it against the king's Scotch enemies and their adherents, so that his enemies could not inflict any loss upon the men of England, or others of his allegiance or friendship, and also to fight against his enemies, but they were not to inflict any loss on any who were of his allegiance or friendship under pain of forfeiture of every thing of theirs that could be forfeited. From a complaint of John le White, William de Revele and Nicholas Pessoun and their fellows of the society of Almain merchants, the king has learned that Ralph Ambrois, master of a ship which is called the ship of St. John of la Rye, fitted out by the men of Wynchelse and sent to sea by them, and John Stywar, constable of the said ship and many other men placed on board her for her equipment, boarded certain ships at le Swyn, in the parts of Flanders and Almain, laden by the complainants and their servants with iron, steel, copper, minever, wax and divers other goods of avoirdupois

May 4.
Westminster.

Exemplification of a record and process of a suit in the court of the late king before Ralph de Hengham and his fellows, justices to hold pleas before the king, in Trinity term 14 Edward I., wherein the king by John le Fauconer, who sued on his behalf, demanded against the prior of the Holy Trinity, Canterbury, the advowson of the priory of St. Martin's, Dover, as the king's right, and as the prior of the Holy Trinity by his attorney claimed nothing in the advowson except that the archbishop of Canterbury in time of voidance assigned a monk out of his house in the place of prior, judgment was given that the king should recover seisin of the advowson against the said prior and that he should have a writ to the sheriff. In Michaelmas term, 14-15 Edward I., further judgment was given in the case in the king's favour. Afterwards, when the king commanded the sheriff to take seisin of the advowson for his use, the sheriff under pretext of that precept took the goods of the priory into the king's hands, to the great loss of the convent of the said priory, as the king learned from their complaint, nor was it the king's intention that by reason of the said judgment the goods of the priory should be taken from it. Again the sheriff was commanded to summon the said prior of Christ Church, Canterbury, and the said prior of Dover to be present to hear the record and judgment of the said suit, as the king wished to be further certified of certain articles touching the same. Thereupon the prior of Canterbury appeared, and the sub-prior of St. Martin's, because there was no prior. The prior of Canterbury said, as before, that he claimed nothing in the said advowson, but that Theobald, some time archbishop of Canterbury had granted by his ordinance to the prior of Christ Church, Canterbury, that on every voidance of the priory of Dover a monk professed in his priory of Canterbury should be preferred to be prior of Dover, and he produced the ordinance. John le Fauconer, who sued on behalf of the king, said that the ordinance ought not to be of any avail to the prior of Canterbury, as king Henry II., the donor of the priory of St. Martin's Dover, whose charter he produced, specially set forth (see the charter above quoted) that no other person than the archbishop of Canterbury should intermeddle with the said advowson, wherefore he sought judgment for the king; thereupon came John, archbishop of Canterbury, by his attorney and said that the advowson of the priory ought to belong to him by the charter of king Henry II., and that the ordinance made by archbishop Theobald ought not to hurt him in any way, because on the death of Theobald it could not bind his successor when it was not rendered valid by the consent of the king, or of others whose assent was required. And as by the said charter it was evident that king Henry did not wish any person to intermeddle with the said priory except only the archbishops of Canterbury, and as the prior of Canterbury did not produce anything to show that any one of his monks ought to be admitted to the priory of Dover, or be preferred to be prior thereof, except only the said ordinance which could bind no one after the death of archbishop Theobald, judgment was given that the said ordinance was of no effect and that the prior of the Holy Trinity, Canterbury, henceforth could not claim anything in the priory of St. Martin, Dover, to prefer any of his monks to be prior of that priory, and that the archbishop might go to the king to seek his right, if he had any, if it should seem good to him to do so.

June 11. Upon the death of Gilbert de Clare, sometime earl of Gloucester and Westminster. Hertford, tenant in chief, the king commanded John Abel, then escheator on this side Trent, to take all lands and tenements in his bailiwick of which the earl was seized in his demesne as of fee on the day of his death into the king's hands and to keep them safe until further orders, and that he should make inquisitions and extents thereof. Among other things contained in the inquisitions and extents so made and returned into the Chancery, it appeared that the earl was seized in his demesne as of fee of the castle and honor of Tonbrigge, co. Kent, and that Matilda, late the wife of the said earl, being pregnant, by reason of which pregnancy the king commanded that the lands and tenements late of the earl, and which in hopes of the birth of an heir had been taken into the king's hands, should be retained as a custody. Afterwards Hugh le Despenser the younger intruded on the castle, and subsequently restored it to the king. Walter, archbishop of Canterbury, however, asserted before the king and Council that the custody of all lands and tenements which are held of him as of his church of Christchurch, Canterbury, after the death of the tenants, and the seisin to be made of the lands and tenants by him and his ministers, belong to him, and that the king's escheator and ministers ought not to lay hand on the same, although the said tenants elsewhere hold in chief as of the Crown, affirming that he, after the death of the earl, entered upon and held the castle and honor, because they were held of him, as of right of his church, until the escheator removed him from the custody of the same, and praying the king to remove his hand from the castle and honor, of which the custody belongs to him for the foregoing reason, and which are in the king's hands through the restitution made by Hugh le Despenser the younger. The king, as it appears that the archbishop's statement is correct, having regard to the right of that church and thinking fit to remove his hand from the castle and honor, grants to the archbishop that he may enter on, have the custody and hold the castle and honor, as pertaining to him in right of his church, and have the same status therein as he had before the escheator removed him, and that anything done by the king's mandate, or the mandate of any other person, by the escheator or other ministers of the king shall not be to the prejudice of him or his successors or of his said church, saving the right, if any, of the Crown. Commission of oyer and terminer to William Martyn and William Bagot, on complaint by the king's men and tenants of his castle of Buelt in West Wales, exhibited before the king and Council in Parliament, that although they are not bound to carry timber to the castle, excepting twice a week and that only when carriage is required and they have been warned, or to supply carriage for any other person than the king, or to any place other than the castle, nevertheless John de Cherleton, keeper of the castle, and his sub-bailiffs and other ministers, and also the men in garrison in the castle, compel the complainants to carry timber thrice a week and oftener, and also to carry victuals belonging to them to other places than to the castle; also they winter their oxen, cows and other animals at the expense of the complainants and compel them to plough their lands, mow their meadows and cut their corn, and if any of the complainants do not obey them therein, the said keeper, bailiffs and others, distrain on and amerce them and put them to ran-om; also they carry away from the houses of the said complainants divers kinds of victuals, viz. lambs, calves, geese, hens, and such like, at a price fixed at their will at a fourth or a third part of the value, and often without fixing any value, although in the markets and common fairs they can find sufficient victuals for their use for sale; further when the said complainants granted to the said keeper 120*l.* on condition that they might use and enjoy the liberties and customs obtained in the time of the king's predecessors and of himself, although the said keeper levied that sum of money from them, nevertheless he continues to distrain them and to compel them to perform the other fees and customs as before they had made such payment; also when the king delivered the castle and town and all the adjacent country into his custody, the keeper delivered the same by particulars to divers farmers, by whose avarice and intolerable extortions the said men and tenants are completely impoverished; further if it happens that any one of the men of those parts is detained for felony and imprisoned in the castle, before he is arraigned or convicted of that felony, the keeper and his sub-bailiffs and ministers cause all his cattle to be brought to the castle, the better ones being retained for the use of the keeper, and the second best for the use of the porter by name of fee, although the accused

John le Clerk had been attached at his suit by Richard de Welleford and Simon de Mereworth, late sheriffs of the city of London, to answer him in the court of the said city of this matter, viz. that the said John le Clerk, together with others, on Thursday next before St. Thomas the Apostle, in the fifth year of the king's reign, on the sea near Rochelle, with his ship maliciously drove against a ship of the complainants, laden with wines and other goods, to break it up, and forcibly cut the cables by which his ship was held, and afterwards boarded her and carried away two anchors and two cables then found in her, and subsequently took away a third cable, whereby the ship was thrown on the rocks and totally lost. The complainant subsequently found the said cables and anchors in a ship of the said John le Clerk lying in 'la Pole' by the Tower of London, and caused them to be carried to the Gildhall in the said city, they being valued at 10*l.* by an inquisition upon which the said Bartholomew de Welle and John le Clerk placed themselves in that court, by which inquisition the latter was convicted, but the anchors and cables still remain at the Gildhall, to the loss of the com-

June 12. Commission to William de Bereford, John de Foxle, and John de West-before the king and Council, setting forth that, whereas the common gaol of that county is in the town of Windesore, which is in a remote part of the county, divers losses and inconveniences have happened to the people of those parts by reason of the distance of the place, and that it is to the great burthen of all those who ought to come there to the common gaol delivery, and especially of those who dwell at the other end of the county; and likewise, because victuals sufficient for men coming there cannot be found in the said town, the men of the county are unwilling to come there to make deliveries, whereby thieves in the said parts are much strengthened and become bolder to commit robbery, and the multitude of them increases in those parts, and that the poor men of the county, viz. four men and the provost of each town, are not able to come to the common gaol delivery to

Wyndesore on account of the distance of the place, for some of them take eight or nine days coming to the town, and as many returning from it to their own parts, and some of them more and some of them less, each according to the distance of his mansion; and those men to avoid such labour and expence frequently omit to present felonies, which manifestly leads to the breaking of the king's peace, and also they omit to indict felons, and to follow them because the country would be charged to bring the thieves to a place so remote, and sometimes that they pass through the middle of the county of Berks, and sometimes through parts of the counties of Oxford and Buckingham with such felons towards the said prison, by which if it happens that those felons effect their escape either by rescue or in any other manner, the king loses such escape, especially when such escape made in one county ought not to be presented in another; moreover the commonalty of the town of Wyndesore is so weak, that prisoners being in gaol there cannot be supported by the alms of the men of the town, so that the prisoners, as well lieges as others, and also those who are not admitted to bail, frequently die for want of sustenance before judgment is rendered, by which the king frequently loses the goods, although the thieves are found with them in their hand, and also the chattels of the felons themselves, and in like manner other escheats to the loss of the crown; furthermore because the gaol of Wyndesore is within the liberty of the forest of Wyndesore, and the coroner there, who hears the confessions of approvers, being of the same liberty, is not elected by the commonalty but within the said liberty, and is not sworn in the county to serve the king in geldable as he ought to be, many losses have frequently happened: moreover because that those indicted for felony and sent to the gaol of Wyndesore are permitted to go forth from the gaol whither they wish, the men of those parts very often fear to indict such felons, on whom due justice is not done for the felonies committed by them, for which causes the said commonalty as well on behalf of the king as for themselves, have petitioned the king to provide a suitable remedy. The commissioners are to enquire by oath of good and lawful men of the said county touching all persons, the matters set forth above, and other things touching the business, and where within the said county the common prison for the county can best be placed for the profit of the king and the people and for their easement, and for the firmer preservation of the peace. Whereas the king lately granted a licence, after inquisition ad quod damnum made by the sheriffs of London, for the alienation in mortmain by Nicholas Husebond, chaplain, to the dean and chapter of the church of St. Paul, London, of 3 messuages and 8 shops in the parish of St. Sepulchre without Neugate, London, although it was found by the inquisition that it would be to his prejudice, viz. that whenever lands or tenements in the same city should be assessed in aids, tallages or other contributions the king would receive no portion accruing from the tallage of the said messuages and shops, and that it would also be to the prejudices of the citizens in this, that when the tenants of lands and tenements in London should be summoned to the king's court in pleas of land held in the same city the parishioners of the parish of St. Sepulchre would be burthened more heavily than formerly. The king now grants licence to the said Nicholas Husebond, upon supplication made by him, to alienate in mortmain the said messuages and shops to the prior and convent of St. Bartholomew's, Smythfeld, to find two chaplains to celebrate divine service daily in the said church of St. Paul and to do other pious works according to the ordinance of the dean and chapter and of the said Nicholas and his heirs.

Inspeximus of letters patent, dated 20 November, 10 Edward I. inspecting the record and process of pleas before the king Henry III. within three weeks of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, 53 Henry III. viz. :—Whereas the abbot of Revesby holds certain land in Hayholm and West Feriwa, with a meadow adjoining, in frank almain, of the gift of William de Romara, sometime earl of Lincoln, as well of the confirmation of king Richard I. as of the present king, and the sheriff of Lincoln and others of the soke of Bolyngbroke, charging him that for the said land and meadow he is bound to repair the bridge and causeway of Nordike, which he and his predecessors have never been accustomed to do, except that they as others of those parts ask alms for the purpose, unjustly caused the abbot to be distrained for the repair of the bridge and causeway. Thereupon the king, wishing the truth to be enquired into, ordered the sheriff to cause certain men of the country to appear before him within three weeks of the day of St. John the Baptist, by whom, &c. When the abbot complained by his attorney that the said William de Romara, earl of Lincoln, and William his son and Hawisia his wife granted to the monks of St. Laurence, Revesby, all the land of Revesby, Thoresby and Skyteby, and also the said William gave of his demesne certain land called 'Hayholm' and 'Westferiwa,' with a meadow adjacent thereto, with all easements and liberties pertaining to the said land, to hold in frank almain, free from every earthly service, exaction and demand; and further William de Romara, grandson (nepos) and heir of the said earl, for the good of his soul and the souls of his ancestors confirmed to the said abbot and monks the grant of William de Romara, sometime earl of Lincoln, and of William his son, to hold in frank almain: afterwards Ranulph, sometime earl of Chester, confirmed as well the charter of William, earl of Lincoln, and of William his son as the confirmation of William the grandson, by which as well king Richard I. as Henry III. by their charters confirmed the foregoing grants and confirmations to the said abbot and monks; the sheriff of Lincoln, some eight years before, and certain from the soke of Bolyngbroke and others distrained the said abbot and monks to repair the bridge and causeway, charging on them that they are bound to do so for the said lands of Haiholm and Westferiwra and the meadow adjoining thereto, given to them as aforesaid, and which until that time they had held in frank almain and quit of all service. And the jurors found that the abbot and monks of Revesby were never accustomed to make and repair the said bridge and causeway, nor are bound to do so, and thereupon judgment was given for the abbot and monks aforesaid.

Afterwards, at the suit of the said Walter, alleging in the king's court that full satisfaction of the 951*l.* had not been made according to the form of the obligation of the count by the said Robert Elis, the obligation aforesaid in regard to such sum out of the said sum of 951*l.* which then remained unpaid to the said Walter and his fellows by the judgment of certain arbitrators, to whom the said Walter and Robert submitted themselves in that behalf, was delivered to the said Walter for himself and his fellows, so that he could follow for the sum in default by writ de arresto against the men and subjects of the count thenceforth coming within the realm. Later, when at the suit of the count suggesting that the said Walter, after the said arbitration and a composition or ordinance afterwards made therein, by virtue of the said obligation remaining in his power, caused divers sums to be taken from the said count and his men by the said Robert Elis and others, and the said obligation to be improperly detained from him, the king caused the said Robert Elis to come before him and the Council in the quinzaine of the Holy Trinity last to answer the count in the premises and to do what should be ordered by the king and Council therein, the said Robert came in person on the said day, and the arguments of the said count propounded there by his attorneys against the said Robert having been heard and the answers of the said Robert, at last the said Robert as well for himself as for the said count alleged against the said Walter le Keu, then present, that the said Walter made an agreement with certain men of Great Yarmouth to levy and receive from each last of herrings of the men of the said count brought within the port of that town 3*s.*, so that he should abstain from making arrests against them, and this contrary to the form of the arbitration or composition aforesaid, and that by pretext of that convention and without any other warrant, he levied and received 60*l.* from the men of the count in the said town: and Walter le Keu said that he did not make the said covenant or any other of that sort, and that he had not levied or received anything of the goods of the earl's men in the said town without warrant, as is charged upon him, upon which matters the said Robert Elis and Walter le Keu placed themselves upon inquisition therein, wherefore the king issued commission as above to hold inquisitions by oath of good men of the county of Norfolk, and to return the same into his Chancery on the morrow of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary.

June 20. Appointment of Aymer de Valencia, earl of Pembroke, William Inge, Westminster. John de Insula and John de Mutford, to go to Bristol, where they are to inform themselves thoroughly touching the undermentioned disturbances, and to re-call the commonalty of the town to their obedience to the king, but if the commonalty continues in rebellion, the commissioners are, under the king's authority, to punish them. By writ under the testimony of Roger le Brabanzun, then chief justice of the King's Bench, the king commanded the sheriff of Gloucester that he should not fail, on account of the liberty of the town of Bristol, to take John le Taverner, Richard Colpek, William de Clif, Robert Martyn, William Snowe and John Simenel, outlaws at the king's suit for the death of Alexander de Vilers in the town of Bristol, wherever they should be found, whether within the liberty of the town, or without it in the said county, and keep them in prison so that he should have their bodies before the king in fifteen days of St. Martin last, to receive judgment of the court therein. On which day the sheriff returned that he had approached the town of Bristol to take the above-named outlaws, whom he found in the Guildhall of the town, and that they and Robert de Wyldemershe, who called himself bailiff of the town, and the commonalty of the town, did not permit him to attach them, wherefore the king commanded the sheriff that he should not omit, on account of the said liberty or any other liberty of his county, to arrest John le Taverner and the other outlaws and also the said Robert de Wildemershe and all others of the commonalty of the town, who had hindered him in the execution of the king's mandates, and keep them in prison so that he should have their bodies before the king in the Octave of the Holy Trinity last past to receive what the king, with the Council, should order. On which day the sheriff returned that he in his proper person had approached the town of Bristol to execute the king's mandate, and that he had caused the entire commonalty of the said town to assemble in the Guildhall, and upon his setting forth before the commonalty the tenor of the king's mandate, all of the commonalty unanimously answered that they would not permit the said John le Taverner, or Robert de Wyldemershe, or any other of the town, to be attached or led away from the town, and they forcibly hindered him in the execution of the mandate, whereupon the sheriff, by word and the laying-on of hands, attached Henry le Shipman and many others of the town who had hindered him; but the persons so arrested forcibly broke the attachment, on which account the sheriff, taking the great posse of the county with him, approached the town to execute the mandate, when he found the gates of the town shut against him, and that the entire commonalty of the town, had collected together to them a great multitude of malefactors, as well men of Bayonne as Welshmen, and that they had drained the dyke of the castle and dried it thoroughly, broken and destroyed the mill of the castle, and in the town, before the castle gate, made a dyke of the depth and width of 24 feet, and fortified the dyke with a strong peel, and there and elsewhere in the town constructed wooden forts, springalds and other engines for attacking the castle, so that no one in the castle could go forth towards the town, and for holding the town against the king and, with standards raised, had made other preparations for open rebellion against the king.

May 23. Commission to Robert de Kendale, constable of the castle of Dover and

Whereas lately on account of the unusual scarcity of corn and other victuals in the realm and the famine oppressing the people thereof, the king took into his protection and safe-conduct merchants of Spain, Sicily and Genoa coming within his realm with corn and victuals, he now understands that certain persons have, notwithstanding the protection and safe-conduct, taken a great ship, called a Dromond. This ship had been laden with wheat and other corn by merchants of Genoa and brought by them to the port of Sandwich, where, after that part of the corn was discharged and sold to merchants of the king's realm, the said malefactors carried her off with the remainder, but the ship having been driven back to Sandwich by contrary winds, many of them were taken out of her and delivered into the prison of Sandwich, in which they are still detained. The king considering that by such a deed other merchants from foreign parts coming under his safe-conduct with corn and victuals, through fear of attack, would withdraw themselves and their wares from the realm, directs the commissioners to enquire, by oath, as well of merchants as of good and lawful men whom they shall find within the said ports, touching the truth of the matter and into whose hands the wheat and other corn sold in the town of Sandwich has fallen, and all other matters touching the business, and with the aid of the barons and good men of the said ports they are to provide for the security of merchants coming into the realm, under the king's protection, with corn and victuals.

and which have since been alienated, and in whose hands the same are. Matilda Rabayn claimed by petition exhibited before the king and Council in Parliament that the barony of Baiocis was of her right and inheritance, whereupon the king ordered Roger le Brabanzon and his fellows, justices of the King's Bench, to examine a record and process touching the matter formerly before the late king and then in the custody of the said Roger, and also the pleas of the said Matilda, and because the said Roger and his associates have for certain causes been superseded in the matter, the king has caused the said record and process, which the said Roger had delivered before the king and Council in the last Parliament at Lincoln, to be examined before the Council, by which it appeared that judgment was rendered before the late king of the said barony, whereof Stephen de Baiocis was seised in his demesne as of fee at the date of his death, viz. that a moiety of the barony should remain to the late king and his heirs and the other moiety to the said Matilda, wherefore upon the petition of the said Matilda, exhibited before the king and Council in the said Parliament at Lincoln, it was answered that she should sue before the king to have the moiety of the said inheritance so adjudged to her according to the form of the said judgment, if it should seem good to her. John de Wermenistre and others, having conspired together at Abyndon, co. Berks, to harass the abbot and interfere with him in his liberties, prevented him from receiving the stallage and other profits of the market belonging to him by taking them for their own uses, and did not permit the decenners of the town, who in the said hundred ought to present certain articles and in like manner in the said view articles belonging to such view, to come to the hundred or view to make such presentments as hitherto they have been accustomed to make, but such articles, which by the decenners ought to be presented in the hundred and view, they have in derision caused to be written in a bill and sent to the bailiffs of the abbot, who hold that hundred and view, and when those malefactors who are suitors of that hundred were spoken to by the bailiffs of the mode of that presentment so made by the bill, maliciously declared that the presentment was good, and frequently rescued distrains taken for amercements and other causes by judgment of the Court of the abbot by his bailiffs, forced men coming for their corn to the abbot's mills to withdraw, and permitted thieves attached by the bailiffs in the town and hundred according to the liberty of 'infangenethef' and 'utfangenethef,' which the abbot has, and delivered into the custody of the decenners, as was the custom, until they should be delivered in due manner, or if they could not be delivered according to the said liberty to be taken by the decenners to the gaol of Wyndesore, to depart, not permitting them to be placed in custody, and assaulted the men, servants and bailiffs of the abbot, so that the abbot has scarcely any servant or bailiff who dares to go forth to execute his office, and for the maintenance of their ill-doing assessed of their own authority tallages upon the men of the town, as if the commonalty had been there and ought to be obedient to them, and, because certain men of the town neglected to assent thereto, made a public proclamation that no one should buy bread, ale or other victuals from them, and terrified others by levelling their houses, so that they made a fine with them.

Commission to William de Bourne, John de Erle and Nicholas de Wedergrave to view the state of the hospital of the Holy Trinity, Yvelcestre, co. Somerset. The king understands from divers complaints that the goods of the hospital set aside for the maintenance of the poor sisters thereof have been grossly wasted by John de Draycote, appointed as his deputy by Simon de Monte Acuto, to whom Master John Walewayn, king's clerk, escheator on this side Trent, is asserted to have committed the custody of the hospital by pretext of an inquisition taken by virtue of his office, by which it appeared that Alice de Chitterne, at the presentation of Nicholas de Boleville, son and heir of Nicholas de Boleville, tenant in chief of the late king, had been preferred to be prioress of the hospital, and because the said Nicholas had not proved his age and had not obtained seisin of his lands and tenements from the king, and also by Walter de Wouburne, to whom the king at the suggestion of the said John lately committed the custody, and whom afterwards, for certain reasons, he removed from it, and also by their accomplices. The commissioners are to enquire what goods have been removed by the said John de Draycote and Walter de Wouburne, and the value of the same, and whether the said Nicholas, the father, held of the late king or of any heir a minor in his custody, and whether, at the time of the presentation of the said Alice as prioress of the hospital, Nicholas the son was seised of the lands and tenements of his father, and what estate his ancestors had in the hospital in times of voidance, to return all goods so removed from the hospital which they shall find and to deliver them for the sustenance of the prioress and sisters, and to compel the said John and Walter and others, in whose hands such goods are found, to make restitution thereof.

Writ of aid, until a year after Martinmas, for Walter le Keu of Lincoln and Henry Rudbudel, burgess of Durdrecht, whom W. count of Hainault and Seland and lord of Friesland has appointed to collect the under-mentioned tolls. In the Parliament at Stamford, 3 Edward II., it was agreed between the king's Council and Christian de Raphirst, knight, and other envoys of the count that the said envoys should first of all satisfy Walter le Keu of Lincoln and his fellows, merchants of the realm, in 954*l.* and Richard Wake and John Wype and their fellows in 259*l.* for goods seized and carried away in Seland by people of the count, and the said count for those sums and also for 87*l.*, which Robert Elys of Great Jernemuth had lent to the said envoys, bound himself to the said Robert Elys in 1,300*l.* to be paid to him at certain terms that the latter on behalf of the count should satisfy the merchants. As, however, the count understands from their complaint that he had not done so, the count, with the assent of his subjects, has ordered that the entire sums shall be levied by one or more of his envoys, or their attorney, from the merchants, fishermen and mariners of his power in the towns or sea-ports within the realm of England, viz. 20*s.* from each ship of his power bringing herrings and fish on its first advent into England once in each year, and from each other ship carrying other kind of wares at every time of the year newly coming within the realm 10*s.* sterling, also of the goods in such ships, viz. for each 1*l.* for an equal portion, and that the collection shall be made until by right computation the entire sum of money shall be levied and satisfaction made as well to the said Robert as the said merchants, so that if any merchants, fishermen or mariners of his power shall gainsay the ordinance or hinder its execution, such persons shall be arrested and their goods remain forfeited at the will of the count; and further the count has petitioned the king to appoint by his letters, as is contained more fully in the count's letters which the envoys hold, the said Walter le Keu and Henry Rudbudel, burgess of Durdrecht, whom the count appointed to be his attorneys for the purpose, to levy the money from his merchants, fishermen and mariners within the realm, by giving them full power to distrain the said merchants, fishermen and mariners to raise the said money, if necessary. The king in compliance with the request of the count appoints the said Walter and Henry to levy, in the count's name, the said tolls, viz. from each ship as above set forth, and of the value of the goods a twentieth penny and to satisfy the said Robert and the said merchants.

Nov. (sic) 16. Edward I. had granted to Christiana de Mariscis, now deceased, the manors Clarendon (sic). of Langele and Wyrerdesbury, co. Buckingham, to the value of 100*l.* a year and the manor of Oueston, co. Northampton, to the value of 50*l.* a year to hold for her life, and afterwards granted by other letters patent that, after her death, the executors of her testament should hold the same manors from the day of her death until the completion of a term of three years, and during that time should receive in full the issues of those manors for the execution of her testament. At the feast of St. Michael, 6 Edward II. half a year after her death, her executors surrendered the manors of Langele and Wyrerdesbury to the king. Edward II. wishing to make due recompence to the executors for what was wanting to them of the value of the said manors of Langele and Wyrerdesbury and of the said manor of Oueston, viz. two years and a half, granted to them that they should hold the said manor of Oueston for seven and a half years from Michaelmas. Afterwards, when the executors agreed that they would demise the manor of Oueston for the same term, subject to a payment of 50*l.* a year to them, to Robert de Appelby, clerk, and that he should have the goods and chattels of the deceased in the manor then in their custody at a reasonable appraisement, the said Robert ejected them from the manor and seized the goods and chattels to the value of 84*l.* 16*s.*, besides 24*l.* 3*s.* which the said Robert received from the issues of the manor from the time of the ejectment until the manor fell into the king's hands, as appears by an inquisition made thereof and returned into the Chancery. After the feast of St. Martin in the winter, 9 Edward II. the manor with the goods and chattels were, on account of trespasses committed by the said Robert de Appelby, taken into the hands of the king. The king, upon the petition of the executors, and in consideration that from the time when the manor came into his hands, there are four and a half years of the original term to run, which according to the covenant is extended at 225*l.* payable to the executors, and, wishing to compensate them for that sum and for the said goods and chattels, grants them 300*l.* to be received at the Exchequer, by half-yearly instalments of 50*l.* until they shall be paid in full.

Mandate in pursuance to the treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer to make such payments, receiving from the executors the said letters, provided that the sums of money, which ought to be provided for the Households of the king and queen Isabella according to the Ordinance, be first of all provided and paid.

*MEMBRANE 31d.*July 18.
Westminster.

Commission of oyer and terminer to William Inge and John de Insula. Whereas the late king, in consequence of the discords existing between the barons of the Cinque Ports and the men of Great Yarmouth, had on 20 May, 5 Edward I. issued an ordinance for the settlement of such troubles, and afterwards, because it was not observed, assigned certain of his Council to treat with both parties, and the said parties with his consent and in his presence having made a concord, the king issued a further ordinance, 31 March, 33 Edward I. enjoining the observance thereof. Lately Edward II. understanding that between the same parties a cause of dispute had arisen from which many evils might ensue, commanded the said barons and men that each party should cause six men as their representatives to come before him to settle such disputes and to carry out what should be ordered by the king and Council, and the twelve representatives being present before him he undertook the reformation of the said evils by forbidding the barons and the men of Great Yarmouth, under pain of forfeiture, from inflicting any damage or attempting any deed by which the peace might be broken. The king has learned that the men of Great Yarmouth, having no consideration for his prohibition or the ordinances, with a great fleet of armed ships, under pretence of trading to foreign parts, have put to sea and attacked the barons and men of the Cinque Ports and other merchants as well in the parts of Portesmuthe and near the Isle of Wight and elsewhere in the county of Southampton, as also near Shorham, co. Sussex, and killed some of them, taking the wine, goods and other wares that were in the ships and afterwards burning the ships. The commissioners are to enquire by oath of good men of the county of Norfolk of the names of those whose ships so armed were sent to sea, and of the lords, masters, mariners and others in the said ships, and of all aiding and abetting them, and to punish all those who shall be found guilty thereof, and those others who shall be specified in inquisitions to be taken by Robert de Kendale, constable of the castle of Dover and warden of the Cinque Ports, John de la Beche, William de Hardenne and Ralph de Bereford, commissioners assigned for that purpose, and to be sent to them.

(Inserted at a later date.) Afterwards, as John de Insula was attending to divers matters of the king's, William de Hardenne and Ralph de Bereford were assigned to act in his stead with William Inge, 26 August.

Whereas the king lately granted to the burgesses of Cambridge that touching trespasses and contracts made in the borough or suburb thereof or other acts committed therein they shall not be convicted by foreigners, but only by their fellow burgesses, unless that deed touches the king or the commonalty of the borough, and that it be not to the prejudice of the masters and scholars of the University of the town in regard to any liberties granted to them by the king's progenitors. The king, considering the dissensions which frequently arise between the men of the town and the scholars, and the ill effects which may follow if the inquisitions touching such shall be taken by the men of the town only, grants, during pleasure, to the masters and scholars of the university, that whenever an inquisition touching trespasses committed on a clerk by laymen, or by clerks on a layman within the town or suburb ought to be held, that such inquisitions shall be taken as well by foreigners as natives of the town. Moreover, whereas Henry III. amongst other things, granted to the said University that if a layman shall inflict any grave hurt on a clerk he shall immediately be taken, and if the hurt be great he shall be imprisoned in the town of Cambridge and detained until he shall make reasonable satisfaction, and if a clerk shall inflict any grave hurt on a layman he shall be imprisoned in the town until the chancellor of the University shall demand him, and as the king has heard that clerks for trespasses committed on laymen are imprisoned with greater severity than ought to be, and laymen for trespasses against clerks are treated with greater indulgence, whereby laymen are emboldened to commit offences, he grants, so that the delinquents shall be punished according to their demerits, to the masters and scholars, that if any layman or clerk shall commit a trespass he shall be imprisoned in the castle of Cambridge until he shall be delivered in form abovesaid.
